Burned: Are Trees the New Coal? (2017)

A look at the controversy of creating energy using biomass. Film makers, Lisa Merton & Alan Dater of Marlboro Productions, visited the Warden Electric Plant in L’Anse, as they traveled across the U.S. documenting the problems created by burning this type of “green” material. Many local residents are interviewed and MDEQ public hearings are featured.

Discussion Facilitators: Lisa Merton, co-writer and co-producer of the film.

Refreshments provided by the Keweenaw Unitarian Universalist Fellowship

Sponsored by Friends of the Land of Keweenaw (FOLK)

Cosponsored by Lake Superior Stewardship Initiative, Michigan Tech Great Lakes Research Center, Keweenaw Land Trust, Keweenaw Unitarian Universalist Fellowship, Sustainable Futures Initiative, and MTU Dept. of Social Sciences

This is the LAST Green Film this season!
